THE STUMP.

The stump is a peculiarly American institution This is a nation of orators. One man in every five is endowed with the gift of the gab. Our common street conversation is often delivered with the emphasis and gesticulation of a formal oration. In high party times we frequently behold at street corners one man haranguing another man with elevated voice, with head and hand in motion, occasionally doubling his fist and brandishing it with such vehemence that we are fearful of assault and battery. The audience, however, shows no fear, only a lively sense of misery till its turn comes to be speaker, and broken its boundaries, it pours forth a torrent that threatens to sweep every thing before it. As a general thing, neither listens to the other, and both are well satisfied if they merely have an opportunity to let off their superfluous steam, and attract by their oratorical display the curious gaze of the bystanders.

The monarchists of Europe, who are compelled to pass their existence in dumb silence upon public affairs, flatter themselves with the idea that Republicanism in the United States has got along pretty well up to this period because of the great extent of our territory and sparseness of our population, and that when we become dense and populous we shall go the way of all republies. This is a grand fallacy. The real safety valve of the American steamboat is the stump. If the prodigious power let off through that medium had no means of escape, there would have been a grand explosion long ago. All the superabundant valor, ferocity, fuss and fury of the nation find vent periodically through that In fact, a complete assortment. agency, and then ensues a period of perfect repose and security. In Europe where peo-ple are obliged to hold their tongues, they have a revolution every ten years; here, our only war is the war of words, and there is no slaughter except of King's English.

Of course, as there is no earthly good without its disadvantages, the stump has some characteristics which are not eminently beautiful. But we do not expect a culvert to be as elegant or as cleanly as a drawing room. We do not expect the roar of the escaping steam to be as musical as a piano .-We need not complain then if the utterances of the stump are not always as vigorous and polished as the fulminations of Demosthenes. Of all the speech-making in the world nothing is easier than to make a political speech. With a brazen countenance, a glib tongue, a may travel from one end of the country to O FFER to the trade, upon accommodating the other, electrifying vast audiences, and being extolled by the press of his party as one of the greatest orators the world has ever seen. The delusion of the populace upon such occasions are among the most interesting phenomena of the human mind. The stalest joke is applauded as if it were the brightest witticism of Sheridan, and the feeble flights of an oratorical fledgling admired as if they were the magnificent soarings of an eagle. The boldest professions of patriotism are accepted as Gospel truth, and the most nauseating egotism and self laudation, which, 150 bbls. RECTIFIED WHISKEY in a private circle would provoke only con- 100 packages DOM, BRANDY tempt and ridicule, elicit uproarous applause. We have often seen a veteran party back, who was perfectly incapable of breathing a patriotic breath, whose whole life had been spent in hunting office, and who was incapable of declining political patronage as the thirsty earth of refusing drink in a refreshing shower, declare before the people, with an air of patriotism which George Washington would have been too modest to assume, that, let others, if they choose, link themselves to the chariot wheels of party, an disowned, disdained and trampled under foot its petty tyranny, and acknowledged no allegiance except to his country! All this, brought out with a sonorous and emphatic utterance, and both hands thrown up to the ceilings, usually bring down the house in the most rapturous shouts, and thrills every intelligent and virtuous mind with intense satis-

We see accounts in some of our exchanges of political gatherings, at which the speakers held forth to "entranced audiences" from half-past seven till half-past eleven, and in one case till half-past twelve o'clock at night, on the mysteries of squatter sovereignty and the abstruse doctries of secession, revolution and nullification. When it is considered that the great majority of these audiences is composed of laboring men, many of whom have been hard at work since day-dawn, it is easy to see why they should be "entranced" by these elaborate orations. The wonder is that they recover the use of their waking senses. What the orators find to talk about, so as to occupy four mortal hours, is a mys tery which passes our comprehension. The orations of the great masters of antiquity never exceed an hour in length. Another mystery connected with stump speeches is when we hear of these orators "working" nobly and "fighting gallantly" for their cause, whereas the only work in most cases is in those who listen, and the only "gallantry" that make the most audacious assertion, unsup- market. ported by a particle of evidence.—Balt. IMPORTANT DISCOVERY .- The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Star

The discovery of an infallible cure for the disease of the silkworm, by electricity, has been communicated to the Academie by M. Sauvageon, of Valence. The result of M. Sauvageon's observations is most satisfactory. The electric current has in every case restored to health and liveliness the unfortunate silkworms suffering from the guttine-that inexplicable malady which has extinguished two whole species of the insect within the last few years, Marshal Vaillant, who is one of the greatest naturalists of the day, has also presented his discovery upon the same subject. During his stay at Milan, as commarshal had much experience in the study | nish on the west accommodating terms. of the silkworm, and has collected a vast number of notes which the Academie has decided upon publishing. His method of treatment, less summary than that of M. Sauvageon, is said to be more efficacious, inasmuch as it prevents the return of the disease. M. Sauvageon's jan 13 cocoons were the object of the greatest admiration at the seance. Among the quantity sent by him for examination none were found wanting in any one quality required for the manufacture of the finest and most brilliant silk. The method of treatment followed by him was simple enough. He placed the silkworms on an insulated iron plate, directing the electric current full upon the insects. In | thoroughly a moment they began to writhe, in their endeavors to escape from the effect of the current. This lasted about ten minutes, at the LIME, from raw-bones. end of which time, on being placed on fresh leaves, they began to work with astonishing industry and vigor.
